

Dr. Sheena Warman is Professor of Veterinary Education at the University of Bristol Veterinary School. She is a veterinary surgeon with broad veterinary and inter-disciplinary expertise, holding both clinical specialty qualifications and a Doctorate in Education. Sheena holds senior leadership roles at School and Faculty level, as Deputy Head of Bristol Vet School and Faculty Education Director for undergraduate programmes in the Faculty of Health Sciences, encompassing medicine, dentistry, anatomy and veterinary programmes. She is leading a major review of Bristol's BVSc curriculum, and consults internationally to drive improvements in assessment and clinical education.

Sheena is widely published in educational and clinical spheres, with over 150 papers, conference contributions and book chapters. She co-edited the highly acclaimed textbook "100 Top Consultations in Small Animal Medicine". Her educational research spans assessment, reflection, faculty development, spectrum of care, and workplace-based learning, with a current focus on curriculum leadership and supporting educators to develop their scholarship of teaching and learning.

Sheena graduated from the University of Glasgow, with an intercalated degree in Veterinary Pathological Sciences from the University of Edinburgh. She worked for several years in mixed veterinary practice before undertaking post-graduate training at Bristol Vet School and working as a clinical academic for twenty years. She holds clinical qualifications in small animal medicine, a Doctorate of Education from the University of Bristol, Fellowship of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, Membership of the Academic of Veterinary Educators, and was awarded a National Teaching Fellowship from the Higher Education Academy in 2016.
